When he was but five years of age Thomas Henderson's parents moved to Greene Co., Ill., floating down the Ohio River in a flat boat. The trip occupied several weeks, and many interesting incidents were deeply impressed on his mind. He remained with his parents until his marriage, when they immediately commenced housekeeping about six miles northeast of Greenfield, in Macoupin Co., Ill., on the groom's farm. Here they resided a few years, then sold their farm and located about three miles further northeast on the 16th section of land. In 1856 the family, numbering eleven, traveled by wagons and teams, with others, to Clark Co., Ia., where he bought 300 acres of land near Jacksonville, the farm lying in both Clark and
